INTRODUCTION

A classroom has a varied mixture of students coming from diverse economic, religious and cultural backgrounds. More importantly, each student possesses unique intellectual capabilities. As such, it is physically as well as logically impossible for a teacher to resort to any particular teaching methodology. The teacher must devote extra time for the slow learners in regard to their academic upliftment. At the same time, he or she must ensure that the advanced learners do not become disinterested in the class. Evidently, it becomes imperative to categorize the students into advanced and slow learners.

CRITERIA OF CLASSIFICATION

During the course of the academic programme, different departments of the institution identify the advanced learners and slow learners in order to impart teaching, offer mentorship, conduct programmes for personality development, offer career counselling, involve students in community work according to their aptitude and capabilities. Some common criteria across different departments for identifying the advanced and slow learners include:

- Performance based on ‘surprised test’
- Marks obtained in unit tests as well as sessional examinations
- Timely submission of home assignments
- Attentiveness in the class
- Performance in seminar presentation

The initiatives for the advanced learners include special programmes, such as special lecture, workshops etc., volunteering work such as Gyanyatra as part of community engagement, career counselling programmes etc. The initiatives for the slow learners include special programmes such as workshops, remedial classes, peer teaching, Parent-Teachers’ Meeting.
